In a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee today, the president's nominee to become the next solicitor general for the United States, Noel Francisco, was grilled by Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) about the mandate that citizens be forced to purchase health insurance under the President's signature healthcare reform. Following Sen. Cruz' lead on the issue, Francisco struggled to answer Cruz' questions about the mandate being unconstitutional, and even when Rep. John Duncan (R-SC) lead a question about the constitutionality of the individual mandate as an individual mandate per se, Francisco turned it around to address constitutionality of the Commerce Clause in a question about the government's power to regulate the healthcare industry. From the transcript, here is Francisco's response to Cruz' question: "Senator, do you think that all tax laws should be – should be allowed to be challenged in court?" "No, senator. I don't." "The Court does not have the power to strike down laws. They can only strike down unconstitutional laws?" "Yes, senator, that's correct. They can't do anything else. And if you look, for example, at the Medicaid program, which requires the state to provide medical services to low-income people, the Court has upheld that as long as it does it within constitutional limits." "But the government has a policy of providing medical services to low-income people, and you're saying that the Medicaid program is unconstitutional?" "No, senator. I'm not saying the Medicaid program is unconstitutional. I'm saying that the Medicaid mandate is unconstitutional because the Fifth Amendment protects us from the mandate." As I wrote, a lot of people have been reading the second draft of my forthcoming book. And, apparently, I've done a bit of a disservice to them by inadvertently leaving out the best part: As it turns out, there are several different types of issues that can be raised in federal courts. The case that many libertarians and constitutional conservatives are most interested in is the case seeking to strike down an unconstitutional law: laws that clearly cross constitutional lines, like the anti-discrimination law that is ruled unconstitutional in a couple of cases every year. But there are other cases, too, and those are the cases that most affect

Q: How to get data object from BroadcastReceiver? I have a broadcast receiver which receives a broadcast. With some help i made my own Weather app. I have a list view, when i click an item in the list it shows detail activity. In my detail activity I need to get some data from the broadcast receiver to initialize some variables to use in detail activity. I was wondering what the easiest and best way to do it? Thanks! A: In the background, it's not possible to do this. You can't get a reference to the Activity that launched your receiver. If you need to pass on information to the receiver, it would be better to do it through an intent rather than a Broadcast. A: You can also use static method of class DetailActivity, getActivity() to call the method from the class DetailActivity. Example: public class MyListActivity extends Activity { public void onListItemClick(ListView parent, View v, int position, long id) { try { Intent i = new Intent(getActivity(), DetailActivity.class); i.putExtra("position", position); i.putExtra("id", id); startActivity(i); } catch (Exception e) { e.printStackTrace(); } } public void onCreate(Bundle savedInstanceState) { super.onCreate(savedInstanceState); setContentView(R.layout.activity_mylist); ListView lv = (ListView) findViewById(R.id.listview); lv.setOnItemClickListener(new OnItemClickListener() { @Override public
