ZEN VFX was a plug-in by Waves and a pioneer of the surround field effect category . Tony Maserati (Multi Award-Winning Engineer) at Beyond Retro - Part 13 How could an EQ be a "field effect"? Join host Scott Bernstein for in-depth and . Aug 27, 2016 Tony Maserati is a Grammy-nominated mixing engineer who works as an in-house engineer for MTV, Sony, For Mix Engineers, Re-Recording Engineers, Engineers, Producers and anyone else interested in music and/or electronics, Waves today announced the Tony Maserati Signature Series, a collection of six professional mixing effects with an additional bonus included. I'm a fan of his work. He does not use a lot of EQ's and for the most part is limited to saturation and compression — not to be confused with his group Black Eyed Peas, which were a part of the A&R department for Interscope Records and signed with them before dropping. This new Signature Series has me very excited as I've heard him talk about how he creates his EQ's and plug-in software and gets them to where they are. He didn't want to create the plug-in packages as his own, but rather as what he would consider for his clients and friends. My good friend that I mentioned in my first post is very excited about this product. Imagine that you're working on a mix for a late nineties style underground hip-hop track. The frequency content is hip-hop or grunge at around 10k-20k. Below that there is a breathy vocal that has no presence in the mids. It's a dull sound that is full of warmth and midrange. It could also be all those nineties bands like Duran Duran, New Order, The Verve, Echo and the Bunnymen and the early Spiritualized. The only thing you're using right now is a compressor, right? I wanted to give you an idea of the kind of sound I'm looking for, so let's try to create a track in 3 easy
